ITTA partners with TTOS to provide Advanced Tactical Tracking Instruction for ITTA Membership

CHICAGO -- Getting the training right is essential to achieve fit-for-purpose solutions to tackle terrorism and major crime. Tactical tracking training meets the challenge and special requirements of at the leading edge of defense for combat tracker teams, mountaineering, and rural law enforcement.

Target acquisition and pursuit, visual tracking for K-9 Handlers, hazards detection and border security operations deeply benefit from this category of training. The success of these programs was recently measured in the rapid capture of escape and evasion expert Joel Lambert by Unit 868, South Korea's national law enforcement counter-terrorism team. This can be viewed on Discovery's US release of Lone Target and Manhunt internationally this spring. This exacting training was delivered by lead experts Peter Kerr and Grant Lightfoot to prepare for the Discovery challenge.

Tactical tracking is part of the solution for reshaped needs in security and the strategic pivot towards the Asia Pacific now so important for international security. This training neatly dovetails with current advances in supporting C4ISR technologies and provides the human element on the ground with clear directions and solutions. This training is also cost-effective and works to support government agencies in this period of fiscal constraint.

ITTA is happy to offer this key security ingredient which aids our partners and allows us to face difficulties together with an effective security measure for the protection of our citizens. Tactical tracking is a hard skill necessary to fully build the capability of our national level tactical teams. Invigorated by the use of new technologies, the venerable and combat tested approach of tactical tracking offers a distinct and cost-effective solution to new and deadly problems posed by international terror and transnational crime.

A local Texas law enforcement official is ITTA's Editor-in-Chief for our flagship publication Tactical Solutions Magazine.
